Cries Unheard Why Children Kill The Story Of Mary Bell

Mary Bell | Murderpedia, the encyclopedia of murderers
It is an extraordinary cautionary tale of a child's capacity for violence. If it is true that children are blessed with an intrinsic goodness, it can also be a very fragile blessing. Bibliography. Sereny, Gitta. Cries Unheard -- Why Children Kill: The Story of Mary Bell. New York: Metropolitan Books, 1999.

A Trainer's Truth About Crates | Modern Dog magazine
The same reasoning extends to children: they can be sent to their room as a consequence for misbehaviour without learning to fear or hate their room. Your dog will only become afraid of his crate if bad things happen while he is in there—so never scold him while he is inside. Time-outs don't need to be long; 30 seconds to 3 minutes is plenty.

Rick and Morty / Tear Jerker - TV Tropes
Summer remembers Beth drunk on her bed when she has to take her to school. Beth wildly swings her wine bottle, hitting Summer in the eye, then makes a spacey apology. It is class picture day. Summer is in tears. She cries that she wants the police to take her instead. Summer also remembers catching Morty masturbating in the kitchen.
